

Domestic Gardens

Tract has over 30 years' experience in the design of contemporary private gardens of varying size and character.

Our record of private garden designs range from highly urbane walled courtyards to large rural estates.

By definition, private gardens are a personal expression, tailored to the specific tastes and requirements of the client. Private gardens, more than most other project types, evolve from a strong collaborative process between designer and client.

Functional requirements must be embedded within a cohesive aesthetic whole. For domestic gardens, the design often explores issues of shelter and privacy, stimuli and sanctuary, the interrelationship between dwelling and garden, and the integration of sculpture, and/ or the garden as artistic expression in its own right.

A garden should always respond to its context - amplifying or ameliorating climatic factors, working with existing built fabric, or working in collaboration with architects to deliver a new building-landscape synergy.

Tract is known for our contemporary design aesthetic.
